	of grains for textiles, since much clothing material for Manchuria was im- forted from North Korea. Some trade still exists, although travel across the river is forbidden by the Manchurian authorities; it is in small quantities and on a barter basis. The North Koreans have little cloth to trade or sell; the hemp cloth on which they depend for summer clothing is still obtainable, but materials for winter garments which were imported, are not now available. In consequence, the population 50X1-HUM
